

Contributors

Joshua Kjerulf Dubrow is an assistant professor at the Institute of Philosophy and Sociology, Polish Academy of Sciences, and is affiliated with the Cross-National Studies: Interdisciplinary Research and Training Program (CONSIRT). His research on political inequality in comparative perspective bridges social stratification and political sociology. He has published in International Journal of Sociology, Social Forces, Party Politics, City and Community, and other journals. He has also contributed to various edited volumes. His interest in political inequality manifests also in editing issues of specialty journals and in organizing sessions at international conferences.

Jacek Haman is an associate professor at the Institute of Sociology, University of Warsaw. His specialization includes social choice theory and formal political theory. He is the author of Demokracja, decyzje, wybory (Democracy, Decisions, Elections, 2003) and coauthor of Podstawy statystyki dla socjologów (Fundamentals of Statistics for Sociologists, with G. Lisowski and M. Jasiński, 2008). He has also contributed to various edited volumes.

Bogdan W. Mach is a professor of sociology at the Institute of Political Studies of the Polish Academy of Sciences and at the Collegium Civitas in Warsaw. His research interests focus on life-course development, attitude evolution, and voting in the context of the post-1989 transformations in East Central Europe. His most recent publications have appeared in the European Journal of Political Economy, Economics of Transition, and Electoral Studies. He is a principal investigator of the research project “The Generation of Historic Hope and Everyday Risks. Social Trajectories of Eighteen-Year Olds from the Year 1989.” This nationally representative panel study had two waves, in 2000 and 2008. His book summarizing the results of the first wave was published in Polish in 2003; a new volume on both waves is planned.

Sandra T. Marquart-Pyatt is an assistant professor in the Sociology and Environmental Science and Policy Program at Michigan State University. She received her Ph.D. from The Ohio State University in 2004. Her research and teaching areas of expertise are in comparative social change, environmental sociology, political sociology, and quantitative methods. Her current work focuses on identifying cross-national patterns on an array of environmental attitudes, beliefs, behavioral intentions, and behaviors. She is also exploring the determinants of political attitudes and participation comparatively and cross-nationally. She is engaged in projects examining democratic attitudes and identity in Poland and attitudes related to welfare state institutions across nations.

Justyna Nyćkowiak is a Ph.D. candidate at the Institute of Sociology of the University of Zielona Góra. She is the author of a paper on determinants of political activity in cross-national perspective published in the International Journal of Sociology (2009). Her research interests include political careers, voting behavior, and social inequality.

Goldie Shabad is a professor of political science at The Ohio State University. She is coauthor of Spain After Franco: The Birth of a Competitive Party System (1986) with R. Gunther and G. Sani. She has also published articles and chapters on ethnic nationalism in Spain, political socialization in post-communist Poland, mass-level support for systemic change in Poland, mass-level support in Poland for European integration, and electoral control and the institutionalization of competitive party systems in post-communist Europe. Her more recent articles have appeared in East European Politics and Societies, Comparative Political Studies, European Journal of Political Research, World Politics, and Party Politics.

Kazimierz M. Slomczyński is a professor in the Department of Sociology at The Ohio State University, and director of the Cross-National Studies: Research and Training Program (CONSIRT) of the Polish Academy of Sciences and The Ohio State University. His English-language publications include Social Structure and Mobility: Poland, Japan, and the United States (1989), Social Structure and Self-Direction: A Comparative Analysis of the United States and Poland (with M.L. Kohn, 1990, 1993, 2007), and Sociological Tools Measuring Occupations (with H. Domański and Z. Sawiński, 2009). He has also edited three volumes on the Polish Panel Survey (POLPAN), 1988–2008. Recent articles have been published in the Polish Sociological Review, European Sociological Review, International Journal of Sociology, World Politics, and Party Politics.

Carolyn Smith Keller is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Sociology at The Ohio State University. Her research interests include comparative social change, cross-national methodology, immigration and race, class, and gender. She is currently working on a study of gender differences in meritocratic allocation in Poland. Her dissertation analyzes class, gender, and ethnicity variation in anti-immigrant sentiments across Europe.

Irina Tomescu-Dubrow is an assistant professor at the Institute of Philosophy and Sociology, Polish Academy of Sciences. She is program coordinator for the Cross-National Studies: Interdisciplinary Research and Training Program (CONSIRT) and co-organizes The Ohio State University Summer School in the Social Sciences in Warsaw: Central and Eastern Europe in Comparative Perspective: Assessing Social and Political Change. Her research focuses on social inequality and methodology, both in cross-national perspective. She has contributed to the International Journal of Sociology, Problems of Post-Communism, and various edited volumes.

Katarzyna Walentynowicz-Moryl received her M.A. in Sociology and Pedagogy from the University of Zielona Góra, Poland. She is currently a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Zielona Góra. Her research interests include sociology of language and sociology of medicine.

Włodzimierz Wesolowski for a large part of his career served as a professor of sociology at the University of Warsaw. Currently he is a professor at Collegium Civitas and professor emeritus at the Institute of Sociology and Philosophy of the Polish Academy of Sciences. His book Classes, Strata and Power (1979) has been translated into several languages. He coauthored Social Mobility and Social Structure (with B. Mach, 1986) and coedited Postcommunist Elites and Democracy in Eastern Europe (with J. Higley and J. Pakulski, 1998). His numerous articles on social inequality and class structure, social and political change, political parties, and elites have been published in prestigious journals of sociology and political science. He has taught at several universities in Europe and the United States. He is a member of Academia Europaea and foreign honorary member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. In 2010 he edited the volume Koncepcje Polityki (Concepts of Politics).

Dorota Woroniecka is a Ph.D. candidate at the Institute of Sociology, University of Warsaw. In addition to women in politics, her main research interests are culture, identity, and security in conflict and postconflict environments, focusing on Ireland and the Palestinian Territories.